

Animals of the American West

PART 1 – The American West is full of many animals that mean different things to diverse groups of people. Animals can be pets. They can also provide clothes, food, homes, tools, and transportation. Learn more about some of the animals that have been important to the people of the American West for hundreds and thousands of years. Look at the images from the Autry Museum of the American West below. Then read the descriptions about these animals beneath each image.

Bears: Grizzly (brown) bears and black bears can be found living in the forests of the American West. Bears are called omnivores because they eat both plants and animals. The fur of bears has been used to make many different items. Native communities such as the Sioux have also used the claws of bears to make necklaces.

Horses: Spaniards brought horses to the American West hundreds of years ago. Horses live in different habitats. They are called herbivores because they eat plants such as grass. In addition to being pets, horses can help people work with other animals like cows. Horses also provide transportation by carrying items and people. They can even pull carriages, carts, and wagons.

Bison: The bison can be found in the Great Plains of the American West. Bison are called herbivores because they eat plants called grass. Plains communities have been using bison to make many different items including clothes, food, homes, and tools. Bison meat provides food. Clothes and homes called tipis can be made from the skin of the bison. Even the bison's bones and horns can be used for tools.

Texas Longhorns: Spaniards also brought Texas longhorns to the American West hundreds of years ago. Texas longhorns are part of the cow family and can be found in the Great Plains. They are called herbivores because they eat plants such as grass. People make leather items out of the Texas longhorn's skin and eat its meat. The horns of the Texas longhorn have also been used to make tools and containers.

Glossary

Diverse: including many different types of people or things

PART 2 – After learning about some of the different animals in the American West, read about some of the needs that people have on the left-hand side. Then read the solutions that animals can provide to fill these needs on the right-hand side. Match the solution to the correct need by drawing a line between them.

Needs

A place to live.

Something warm to wear.

A spoon to eat with.

A meal to eat.

People and items to be moved.

Solutions

Bison meat provides food.

Bison horns provide tools.

Bison skin provides homes.

Horses provide transportation.

Bison fur provides clothes.

Glossary

Needs: something very important that people must have
