Los Angeles, CA (May 30, 2018) — Native Voices at the Autry, America's leading Native American theatre company, presents its 24th Annual Festival of New Plays at the Autry Museum of the American West and La Jolla Playhouse. The festival features staged readings of new and in-progress plays by Native writers followed by talkbacks in which each audience member becomes an important part of the collaborative process.

"New play development is such a rewarding endeavor," said Jean Bruce Scott, Native Voices Producing Executive Director. "You get to work on new scripts with experienced directors, designers, dramaturgs, and cast members who are fully committed to showing the playwright what they've got on the page — and how it might look on the stage. At Native Voices, we get to share that work with both Autry and La Jolla Playhouse audiences, who are vital to the playwright's success by allowing them to hear how the language, structure, story, and themes are working. Along the way, the playwrights work with their dramaturgs to rewrite and revise their scripts, fine tuning them for future production."

A weeklong playwrights retreat preceding Native Voices' highly respected festival brings together beginning, emerging, and established Native American playwrights who shape their plays with nationally recognized directors, dramaturgs, and an acting company of exceptional Native American actors. Over the past eighteen months, the American stage has seen an explosion of Native theatre produced by prestigious theatre companies across the country. Many of these plays and playwrights developed their talents and work through Native Voices Annual Playwrights Retreat and Festival of New Plays including Bingo Hall (2018), Fairly Traceable (2017), They Don't Talk Back (2016), and Off the Rails (2015). They continue to excite new audiences and demonstrate that changing the stories we tell can change the culture of an art form, its artists, institutions, and audiences. Native Voices at the Autry is proud to contribute to the success of the field by supporting new work and championing Native playwrights and theater artists.

The Festival of New Plays is free but reservations are recommended. For reservations and additional information, visit TheAutry.org/NativeVoices.
